

After lot of persuasion, IRS finally extends tax filing deadline to July 15

The IRS has finally extended the April 15 deadline for filing Tax returns to July 15 due to the coronavirus outbreak. Like many trade organizations, our office had also written to the Treasury Secretary to highlight the real-world difficulties that CPAs and their clients are facing. As a result, we have requested an immediate action in terms of extending the filing deadlines, especially for small businesses and individuals.

We are going through perhaps one of the most uncertain times in our history. California has asked its nearly 40 million residents to stay home to prevent the spread of the coronavirus. Other cities across the country are also having to shut businesses down because of the pandemic.

The “shelter at home” requirement has meant that we have had to shift our operations at individual homes of our staff members in the past couple of days. This has caused some disruption since it requires us to set up our systems at home and reconfigure our communications.

We are back on track and are very hopeful that we will soon begin operating at our optimum capacity in a couple days and by the beginning of next week we should be able to function seamlessly as far as possible.

Thank you for your understanding. We look forward to continue to serve our clients with the utmost professional competence and commitment.

Sincerely,

Neeraj Bhatia
